WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 29, 2025

Flood Activity California

- Three days of heavy downpours that spawned flash flooding and mudslides across Southern California subsided on Friday, as residents of homes in the hard-hit mountain resort of Wrightwood began digging out mud and assessing damage.
- The holiday storm drenched the greater Los Angeles basin with up to 6 inches of rain by Friday, with 12 inches or more measured in lower-elevation mountains east of the city, according to the National Weather Service.
- The torrential rains were accompanied by strong, gusty winds that toppled trees and power lines across the region, causing power outages. Heavy snow fell in upper mountain areas.
- In Wrightwood, a town of about 5,000 residents that bore the brunt of the storm in the San Gabriel Mountains northeast of Los Angeles, county safety inspectors began initial assessments of property losses.
- County officials confirmed at least 50 homes sustained "severe damage," and Wrightwood remains under a boil-water notice as power outages persist.
- Following several days of dry, sunny and windy conditions, a new storm packing rain and travel delays will roll into California later this week.
- Rainfall is not expected to be excessive. There will still be some pockets where the rain is heavy enough to renew the risk of mudslides and flash flooding, such as along the south- and west-facing slopes of the Transverse Range in Southern California.
- Most of the streams and rivers should be able to handle the rain without significant flooding.
- Showers will spread across much of Southern and Central California during the afternoon and early nighttime hours on New Year's Eve, spreading to Northern California, Las Vegas and Reno, Nevada, and Phoenix late Wednesday night and Thursday.
