Earthquake Ohio

- A 3.3 magnitude earthquake was reported Monday afternoon in Ohio and felt in parts of Kentucky and West Virginia.
- According to the United States Geological Survey, the earthquake was reported at around 4:39 p.m.
- About two miles northwest of Chesapeake, just across the Ohio River from Huntington, West Virginia.
- The earthquake's intensity shows reports from Gassaway and Charleston in West Virginia to Morehead and Stambaugh in Kentucky.
- The quake had a reported depth of just more than 14 miles.

Disaster Declaration Request South Carolina

- On December 13, Governor Henry McMaster requested a Major Presidential Disaster Declaration to assist state and local recovery efforts following severe storms and heavy rainfall that caused significant flooding across portions of the Midlands and Lowcountry from November 6 to November 14, 2024.
- The President's Disaster Declaration, if approved, would provide FEMA Individual Assistance Program assistance to impacted residents in Bamberg and Orangeburg Counties.
- The request follows extensive damage assessments conducted by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and state and local emergency management teams, which determined that more than 100 homes were damaged and that public agency costs related to infrastructure damage are projected to exceed $11 million.
- Calhoun County received more than 14 inches of rain in a 24-hour period, and Orangeburg County similarly recorded more than 12.4 inches during that same period.
