WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

January 3, 2024

Severe Weather & Flood Threat Gulf Coast

- The first of three rounds of active weather is ongoing and will continue to impact the Gulf Coast states on Wednesday.
- An area of low pressure located just off the coast of Louisiana will move east along the Interstate 10 corridor.
- A more significant rain event – one that could become a nor'easter and produce flooding – will impact the region from Friday into Saturday.
- There is some concern for a few severe storms on Saturday afternoon and evening across Florida, though specific details remain uncertain, as it depends on the exact track of the system, the FOX Forecast Center noted.
- On Monday, a Level 2 out of 5 risk was issued from NOAA's Storm Prediction Center for severe weather from southeastern Texas along I-10 all the way into the Florida Panhandle.

Winter Storm Outlook East Coast

- A brewing winter storm could pack a punch for major cities across the East Coast this weekend, potentially ending some cities' snowless streaks that have been in place for more than 700 days.
- An area of low pressure is expected to form Friday near the Gulf Coast before tracking up the East Coast through the weekend, impacting states from Texas to Maine.
- While several inches of rain is possible for parts of the Southeast, exact snow totals remain in question as the placement of this low-pressure system will be crucial for the forecast.
