WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

January 10, 2022

Flood Activity Pacific Northwest

- Flooding coursed over roads, inundated farmland and curtailed access to a Native American reservation in Washington state on Sunday.
- Nearly a week of rain and snow in the Pacific Northwest has shut down highways, prompted evacuations and is now being blamed for the suspected death of a Washington state man.
- Residents living in the Skokomish Valley area of Mason County, Washington, were under an evacuation order due to rising water and "imminent flooding," the county said in a news release, CNN reported.
- Southwest Washington has experienced its worst flooding in a decade and some rivers crested at more than 18 feet (5.5 meters) last week, the National Weather Service said.
- Washington Gov. Jay Inslee issued an emergency proclamation on Friday.
- The weather service issued flood warnings Sunday for Grays Harbor and Thurston counties. It said moderate flooding in the Chehalis River was affecting road access to the Chehalis Reservation near Oakville. A flood warning continued for the Pudding River in Oregon's Clackamas and Marion counties.

Severe Weather Activity Southern U.S.

- The second severe weather outbreak in a month targeted Texas and Louisiana this weekend, as reports of gusty winds and tornadoes came flooding in.
- Five tornadoes were confirmed to have touched down in Southeast Texas on Saturday and into the overnight hours. Two EF-1 tornadoes were among those confirmed: one in Humble, Texas and the other in Kingwood, Texas.
- Heavy rainfall deluged much of southeastern Texas Saturday afternoon and into early Sunday, which prompted the National Weather Service (NWS) to issue a flash flood warnings for Liberty and Polk counties, Texas into early Sunday morning.
- As of 10 a.m. CST on Sunday morning, approximately 16,500 customers were without power in Texas, plus another 5700 in Louisiana, according to Poweroutage.us.
- A possible tornado on Sunday brought damage to a mobile home and injured five in rural Louisiana, according to The Associated Press. The storm affected 15 homes and numerous sheds and vehicles in the Pearson community.
