Tropical Activity Atlantic - Disturbance 1

- Located over the far eastern tropical Atlantic south of the Cabo Verde islands.
- Environmental conditions appear conducive for gradual development of this system during the next several days.
- A tropical depression is likely to form later this week or this weekend.
- This system is expected to move westward to west-northwestward at around 15 mph across the eastern and central tropical Atlantic through the weekend.
- Formation chance- 48 hours: Low (30%); 7 days: High (70%)

Eastern Pacific – Hurricane Kiko

- Kiko, which intensified into a hurricane early Tuesday morning, is churning in the East Pacific more than 1,000 miles west-southwest of the southern tip of Baja California. The storm is forecast to gradually strengthen in the coming days and continue to move away from North America.
- Even though Kiko is forecast to move away from the lower 48 states, it could hold together long enough to impact Hawaii.
- "The Hawaiian Islands should continue to monitor Kiko's track and progress, because it's not out of the question that the storm could pass near the Islands early next week," DaSilva said.
- AccuWeather hurricane experts believe the Big Island of Hawaii could at least have increased wave activity early next week.
- If Kiko passes close enough to the islands, tropical downpours and gusty winds could also be a concern next week, especially for the Big Island.
