WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

January 22, 2021

Winter Storm Outlook

- A duo of storms, with the second one expected to be much stronger and larger, will deal wintry blows to portions of the Midwest and Northeast this weekend and early next week.
- For part of the North Central states, a one-two punch is possible with snow or a wintry mix potentially overlapping from both storms in parts of Nebraska, Iowa and the northern parts of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.
- Southern parts of Wisconsin and Michigan could also get walloped by back-to-back episodes of winter weather.
- "The first storm is forecast to produce a large swath of 1-3 inches of snow from parts of the northern Plains to the Midwest during this weekend," AccuWeather Senior Meteorologist Brett Anderson said.
- Snowfall is forecast to diminish as the system approaches the eastern part of the Great Lakes region and the central Appalachians late Sunday and Sunday night. However, a bigger storm will already be starting to cause trouble over parts of the Plains by that time.
- A storm for the first part of next week is on track to produce snow, ice and a wintry mix along an approximately 1,500-mile-long zone from parts of Kansas to eastern New York state and southern New England.
- The track of the second storm -- which is expected to be both stronger and larger than the first - is not set in stone at this time.
- Which areas of the Central and Northeastern states get hit the hardest will depend on the northward versus southward extent of the storm's long west to east swath of snow and ice.
