Severe Weather

South

- More than 17 million people from eastern Texas to the lower Mississippi Valley will be at risk of severe thunderstorms on Thursday.
- The FOX Forecast Center said the cold front will continue to slide off to the east, and daytime heating will provide additional atmospheric energy to help fire up more thunderstorms.
- The threat zone includes cities such as Houston, The Woodlands, Beaumont and Pasadena in Texas, as well as Lafayette, Alexandria and Lake Charles in Louisiana.
- Main threats will be the risk of hail, damaging wind gusts and even some tornadoes.
- Flood Watches are in effect across portions of 10 states from Texas to Pennsylvania as the system dumps rain across those regions.

Wildfires

North Carolina

- At least three wildfires have ignited near North Carolina.
- As of Thursday morning, the Crooked Creek Fire in McDowell County has burned an estimated 250 acres and is now 55% contained.
- The evacuation order for the affected areas has been lifted, allowing residents to safely return to their homes.
- One home has sustained damage, and multiple outbuildings have been destroyed, fire officials said.
- The McDowell County Office of Emergency Management said the fire was started by a tree on a downed power line, and gusty winds are driving the flames in the area.
- Two more fires began north of Marion, North Carolina, on Wednesday afternoon.
- No evacuations are in place for either fire.
