WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 3, 2024

Winter Weather Outlook

- A storm sweeping across southern Canada will unleash strong winds, snow showers and new rounds of lake-effect snow from Tuesday night to Thursday night across portions of the Midwest and Northeast.
- The steadiest snow will track near the Canada border from northern Minnesota, northern Michigan and the northern parts of New York and New England.
- From Wednesday to Thursday, winds will become more west to northwest, and the bands of heavy lake-effect snow will orientate to the southeastern shorelines throughout the Great Lakes from northern Wisconsin and Michigan to northern Ohio, northwestern Pennsylvania and western and central New York.
- Gusts averaging 30-50 mph are in store over much of the Midwest and Northeast on Wednesday, before confining to the Northeast on Thursday, with AccuWeather Local StormMax™ gusts of 65 mph most likely near the Great Lakes and over some of the ridges.
- Potential for a rapid freeze-up where the snow squalls just wet the roads, and then the road freezes before it is dried off by gusty winds.
- These conditions concern portions of central and southern Wisconsin, the northern parts of Illinois and Indiana, the Lower Peninsula of Michigan and a large part of Ohio, West Virginia, New York and Pennsylvania, as well as northern Maryland, northwestern Virginia, northern and northwestern and central New Jersey and much of New England.
