Eastern Pacific Tropical Activity

- The first tropical depression of the season, which formed in the Eastern Pacific, is expected to strengthen into Tropical Storm Alvin on Thursday.
- Tropical Depression One-E is expected to remain far enough offshore that impacts along Mexico's coast.
- If Tropical Depression One-E continues to strengthen, as currently forecast, it will be named Tropical Storm Alvin and become the first tropical storm of the season.
- It is expected to reach cooler waters by Friday and quickly fall apart south of Mexico's Baja California Peninsula.
- Once the center of circulation dissolves, forecasters will watch where the system's remnants venture for increased precipitation chances over mainland Mexico and potentially into the southern U.S.

Severe Weather Activity

Texas

- Powerful thunderstorms swept across a large swath of Texas on Wednesday.
- Damaging winds, hail and flash flooding that triggered water rescues and left thousands without power.
- The Austin Fire Department reported responding to around a dozen water rescues.
- Doppler radar indicated storms were capable of dropping more than an inch of rainfall per hour, which can quickly overwhelm drainage systems in low-lying areas.
- Strong winds knocked down trees and power lines leaving some 30,000 customers still without power in Travis County as of Thursday morning.
- Wind gusts were estimated to be between 70 and 80 mph, which is equivalent to the force experienced during a Category 1 hurricane.
