WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

February 10, 2025

Snow Northeast

- The FOX Forecast Center said at least three separate winter storms are expected to sweep across a large portion of the U.S. during the week ahead.
- A threat of widespread snow and ice to tens, if not hundreds, of millions of Americans from coast to coast.
- The first of three winter storms is expected to develop over the Plains as we begin the new workweek.
- The National Weather Service issued winter weather alerts for more than 20 million Americans from the central Plains to the mid-Atlantic.
- Winter weather alerts will be in effect until at least Wednesday morning.
- Portions of eastern Colorado, southern Nebraska, most of Kansas, central and northern Missouri, southeastern Iowa and western Illinois are all under a Winter Storm Watch.
- The NWS said the storm will exit the Rockies on Tuesday and will impact the central Plains from Tuesday afternoon into Wednesday.
- Kansas Gov. Laura Kelly issued a verbal state of disaster emergency proclamation on Sunday morning.
- The storm is expected to move into the Ohio Valley, and then slam the mid-Atlantic and portions of the Northeast into Wednesday morning.
- Richmond, Virginia, Washington and Baltimore are under Winter Storm Watches through Wednesday.
- Heavy snow is possible, with totals between 4 and 6 inches. Winter Storm Warnings are in effect for portions of northwestern North Carolina, central and western Virginia and eastern West Virginia.
- The FOX Forecast Center said the second storm will spread snow into the Midwest by Wednesday night before setting its sights on the Northeast on Thursday.
- This storm could potentially produce the highest snow totals of the three, as heavy snow is looking more likely from the Plains to New England.
- The last storm, for now, is expected to take shape late this week and continue into the weekend bringing yet another round of winter weather to cities from the Plains to New England.
