WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

March 11, 2025

Severe Weather Outlook South & Central U.S.

- NOAA's Storm Prediction Center (SPC) has highlighted portions of the Plains, Deep South and lower Mississippi Valley, where strong to severe thunderstorms could cause some disruptions.
- More than 3 million people in southeastern Oklahoma, northeastern Texas and western Arkansas are within this risk on Wednesday.
- Forecasters warn that storms could produce large hail and damaging wind gusts.
- The severe weather threat then shifts to portions of eastern Mississippi and Alabama, including cities like Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Birmingham, on Thursday.
- The FOX Forecast Center said the potential multiday severe weather outbreak could kick off on Friday as the storm system intensifies across the central U.S.
- Some supercell thunderstorms and a fast-moving squall line are also possible, bringing the threats of damaging winds, large hail and tornadoes. Some of those tornadoes could be strong (EF-2 or higher).
- Currently, it looks like cities such as St. Louis, Memphis in Tennessee and Little Rock in Arkansas could see the highest risk.
