WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

May 2, 2025

Severe Weather Outlook Northeast

- More rain and thunderstorms are expected across the region, marking the sixth out of the past seven weekends that precipitation is in the forecast.
- The FOX Forecast Center said the first back-to-back storm systems is approaching the region on Friday.
- Storms could produce strong wind gusts and hail, but weak wind shear – the change in wind speed and direction with height – will keep the overall threat of severe weather low.
- A second storm system will drop out of the northern Plains and make its way to the east by Saturday.
- Storms are likely to break out across the interior Northeast and mid-Atlantic Saturday afternoon before racing toward the coast during the evening hours.
- The ability to produce damaging winds and some large hail is possible.
