WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

April 11, 2022

Severe Weather Outlook

- As a powerful storm emerges from the West and takes an agonizingly slow track across the Great Plains this week, severe thunderstorms will erupt for multiple days over the central United States, AccuWeather meteorologists warn.
- Through Thursday, at least 18 states could be affected by the outbreak.
- Some locations in the southern U.S. may be hit by severe weather for the fourth consecutive week, but the setup may also pose the most significant risk of severe thunderstorms for portions of the North Central states of the year so far, perhaps eclipsing the outbreak from March 25.
- Severe weather is likely to unfold on Monday from northeastern Texas to Arkansas and southern Missouri.
- The storms on Monday afternoon and evening will likely fire just east of a boundary separating dry air over the High Plains to the west and surging warm and humid air from the Gulf of Mexico to the east.
- A few storms in this zone could bring all modes of severe weather, including large, damaging hail and isolated tornadoes.
- However, the scope and intensity of severe weather is forecast to expand Tuesday, reaching far south as the upper Texas and Louisiana coasts and as far to the north as northern Iowa, roughly a 1,000-mile stretch.
