Eastern U.S.

- Winter Weather Alerts have been issued for parts of Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas through Monday morning, while new alerts have expanded east into Virginia through Tuesday morning.
- Major impacts are unlikely, though the system may cause minor travel disruptions as far east as Washington, D.C.
- The steadiest snow in the Ohio Valley will fall Monday morning before tapering off, with a narrow strip of 2–3 inches and ice accretion up to a tenth of an inch possible.
- Beyond Monday morning, the focus for wintry weather shifts east into the Mid-Atlantic as the system tracks toward the coast.
- Light snow is expected to develop across the central Appalachians and along the I-95 corridor around Washington, D.C., with up to 1–2 inches of snow possible farther east.
