Severe Weather Outlook Midwest & South

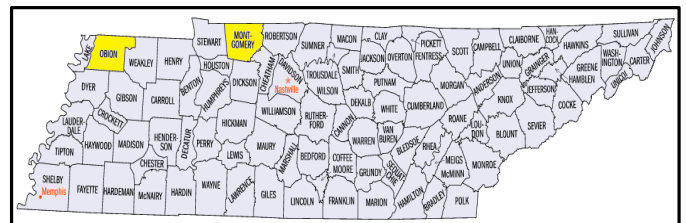

- The FOX Forecast Center is tracking the threat of severe weather this weekend in parts of the South.
- The threat of severe weather will begin on Saturday.
- "We're looking at parts of Kansas and Oklahoma, but eventually it drifts into areas that have already been hit, Missouri and parts of Arkansas," FOX Weather Meteorologist Britta Merwin said.
- The main concerns with any thunderstorms that develop will be strong wind gusts and hail.
- As we move from Saturday into Sunday, moisture is forecast to increase considerably over the southern Plains.
- Particularly during the late-afternoon and evening hours from eastern Texas through the lower Mississippi and Tennessee valleys.
- The area of concern for severe weather has been expanded to include more areas of the South and Tennessee Valley.
- The severe weather threat on Sunday is centered across areas of the lower Mississippi Valley and South.

Disaster Declaration Request

Tennessee

- On March 18th Tennessee Governor Bill Lee requested Individual assistance for Montgomery and Obion Counties.
- Several rounds of significant severe weather impacted Tennessee on February 15, 2025.
- Obion County had issued mandatory evacuations for residents in the Town of Rives due to water overtaking the levee on the Obion River.
- Tornadoes were embedded in a fast-moving squall line, including an EF2 tornado that heavily damaged homes, destroyed a barn, and downed large trees near Bradford, Tennessee.
- A total of 23 tornadoes were confirmed, resulting in no fatalities and two injuries.
