WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

November 25, 2024

Weather Outlook

North/Northeast

- At the beginning of this week, a weak storm system is expected to bring rain from parts of the Southeast into the Northeast.
- The FOX Forecast Center expects any winter weather to be confined near the Canadian border and in the Great Lakes region.
- Winter Weather Advisories were in effect Monday morning across portions of the Upper Midwest and northern New England as a result of this first storm system.
- On the warm side of the storm, there's the potential for heavy precipitation throughout the Tennessee Valley and into the mid-Atlantic that could cause problems on Thanksgiving Day.
- More rain is expected along the I-95 corridor, concerns are starting to grow that heavy snow could significantly impact travel on Thanksgiving Day and after the holiday.
- FOX Forecast Center says there is an increasing likelihood that those in the Northeast who were impacted by last week's winter storm will face another significant snowstorm, particularly from Thanksgiving Day into Black Friday.
- Forecasters said this brewing storm and its impacts will likely linger into next weekend.
- Below-average temperatures are expected across a large swath of the U.S., with parts of the northern Plains expected to plunge maybe as far as -10 degrees.
