WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

Winter Storm Outlook East Coast

- A coastal storm will deliver snow to part of the southeastern United States on Sunday before eyeing the mid-Atlantic coast and New England on Sunday night.
- A shift in the jet stream and just enough cold air will pave the way for a band of snow from southern Alabama and Georgia to Virginia later this weekend, with a risk of a significant snowfall in part of the Northeast.
- How much snow falls in the southern parts of Alabama and Georgia, and the eastern parts of the Carolinas, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, as well as farther up along the mid-Atlantic coast and into southeastern New England, will depend on the exact track of the storm, as a small shift can make a big difference.
- At this time, a general coating to an inch is forecast with an AccuWeather Local StormMax™ of 3 inches.
- The timing for the snow in southern Alabama and southwestern Georgia would be late Saturday night.
- On Sunday night, there is a possibility of accumulating snow from Delaware and New Jersey to southeastern New York.
- From Sunday night to early Monday, there is the potential for accumulating snow from southern New England to Maine and Atlantic Canada. Areas most likely to receive a few inches of snow are Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and Nova Scotia.
