WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 9, 2024

Severe Weather Washington

- More than two weeks since the bomb cyclone storm hit western Washington, officials are getting a closer look at how much the damage cost.
- Snohomish County Department of Emergency Management is also surveying homeowners to understand how much damage they faced.
- "We've already gotten almost 100 responses, and they're reporting about $2 million worth of damage," said Lucia Schmidt, the director of Snohomish County Department of Emergency Management.
- King County has surpassed the $10.7 million damage threshold for government and public benefit organizations, with the total now reaching $11 million and counting. This allows the county to request the state to begin the process of applying for federal disaster assistance.
- According to King County Emergency Management, the storm's impact on residents has been severe, with nearly 1,700 damage reports filed and close to 250 homes suffering major or catastrophic damage. In response, the county has asked the state to conduct a formal damage assessment for the FEMA Individual Assistance Program.
