Tropical Activity

Atlantic – Tropical Storm Jerry

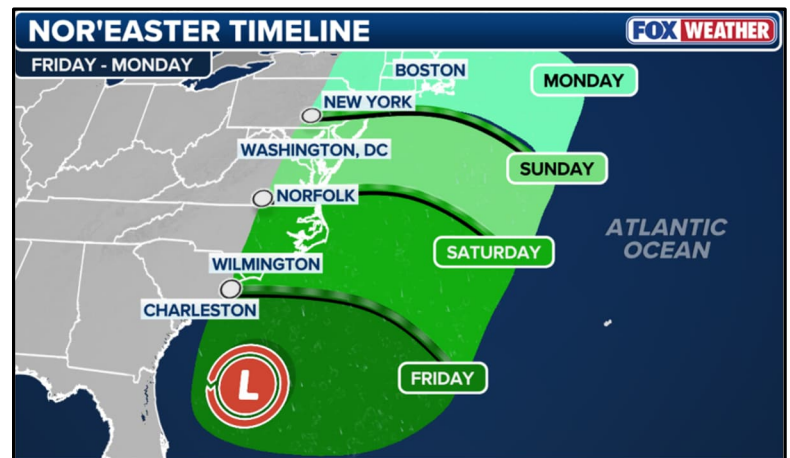

- Tropical Storm Warnings linger for portions of the Leeward Islands Friday morning as a struggling Tropical Storm Jerry continues to spin across the Atlantic.
- The National Hurricane Center (NHC) says Jerry is still fighting moderate to strong wind shear.
- The NHC has pulled back on Jerry's future prospects, no longer predicting the storm will reach hurricane strength.
- Jerry is still drenching some of the Leeward Islands with several inches of rain, triggering flash flooding dangers.
- Maximum sustained winds have dropped to 50 mph with some higher gusts.
- Located about 80 miles to the northeast of the northern Leeward Islands and is moving off to the northwest at 17 mph.

Nor'easter

East Coast

- A brewing nor'easter is expected to slam the Atlantic Seaboard over multiple days with heavy rains, 'major' coastal flooding and potentially damaging wind gusts.
- The storm is set to thrash the coastal Carolinas Saturday, then spread its impacts into the Northeast on Sunday.
- The wind threat has already triggered High Wind Watches across parts of the nation's most populous corridor, with forecasters saying gusts up to 60 mph could impact close to 10 million Americans along the New Jersey Coast on Sunday and in New York's Brooklyn, Queens and Long Island by Sunday night.
- While development will be slow at first, the storm will pick up energy through the day and into early Saturday.
- Heavy rain will begin impacting the coastlines in the morning through late evening with widespread totals of 2-3 inches, with locally higher amounts across the Outer Banks of 3-5 inches or more, according to the FOX Forecast Center.
- Winds will increase into the afternoon with gusts around 40–50 mph along the coastline.
- By Sunday morning, the center of our Nor'easter will be somewhere close to coastal Virginia.
