WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

May 30, 2024

Severe Weather Outlook

- Another day of severe weather will impact Texas and the southern Plains with two rounds of storms on Thursday, bringing the threat of damaging winds, very large hail and possible tornadoes.
- Thunderstorms began to develop Thursday morning as they raced along and south of the Red River across North Texas.
- The FOX Forecast Center said this should bring the storms into the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex around midday, where they will pose the risk of 60-mph wind gusts and dangerous lightning with additional power outages possible.
- This activity will continue to move across East Texas through the afternoon packing 40-60 mph wind gusts, possibly reaching the Houston area as the sun sets.
- A round of storms is forecast to explode along a dryline across West Texas starting in the late afternoon.
- The FOX Forecast Center said hail will be the predominant threat from these storms.
- A tornado or two will be possible as well. Amarillo, Lubbock, Midland and Odessa are in the threat area.
- The threat of severe storms will shift east on Friday, encompassing the more highly populated East Texas, southeastern Oklahoma and western Louisiana.

Tropical Activity

Eastern Pacific – Disturbance 1

- Located a few hundred miles S of southern Mexico.
- Slow development of this system is possible during the early and middle portions of next week.
- Formation chance – 48 hour: Low (near 0%); 7-day: Low (20%)
