WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

January 28, 2022

Winter Storm Outlook

Northeast

- Residents across the mid-Atlantic and New England on Friday were bracing for a major weekend snowstorm as a nor'easter will develop and rapidly strengthen into a bomb cyclone as it moves northward along the Eastern Seaboard.
- AccuWeather forecasters say the storm could unload over 3 feet of snow and up to 90-mph winds as it pounds eastern New England and creates an all-out blizzard in some areas.
- "This is going to be a dangerous, life-threatening storm, which will be a blizzard in some spots, especially in southern New England," AccuWeather Chief Meteorologist Jon Porter said.
- Boston will be in the heart of the storm, which is expected to unload 18-24 inches in the city. It is not out of the question for the blizzard to climb into the top-five biggest snowstorms to impact Boston, and it could be the biggest to hit Beantown in January.
- Other locations that will see a similar dumping of snow, with an AccuWeather Local StormMax™ of 42 inches, are Providence, Rhode Island, to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and Portland, Maine.
- Just south and west of this zone from Islip, New York, to Hartford, Connecticut, Worcester, Massachusetts, Manchester, New Hampshire, and Bangor, Maine, 12-18 inches are in store, forecasters say, which is still a tremendous accumulation considering the major blowing and drifting snow that is anticipated during and after the storm.
- Should the storm strengthen to its maximum potential, hurricane-force winds of 74 mph or greater could be felt in southeastern New England, causing power outages.
- "Roads prone to flooding during nor'easters along the coast in eastern Massachusetts and along the north shore of Long Island are likely to be inundated with significant overwash from this storm," AccuWeather Senior Meteorologist Brett Anderson said.
