Tropical Activity

Atlantic –Tropical Storm Rafael

- Tropical Storm Rafael is continuing to strengthen and remains on track to become a hurricane.
- The NHC said that computer forecast models show there is a "significant chance" that Rafael could rapidly intensify as it approaches the Cayman Islands and Cuba.
- As of the latest advisory, Rafael is located about 100 miles southwest of Kingston, Jamaica, and is moving to the northwest at 13 mph.
- Rafael has maximum sustained winds of 60 mph, and strengthening is expected to continue.
- A Tropical Storm Watch has been issued for the lower and middle Florida Keys from Key West to west of the Channel 5 Bridge, and for Dry Tortugas.
- The NHC says Rafael is expected to continue generally northwestward movement over the next few days.
- The tropical storm is expected to move near Jamaica on Tuesday morning, be near or over the Cayman Islands on Tuesday night and be near or over western Cuba on Wednesday.
- There are still some questions about what will happen next with Tropical Storm Rafael after it moves into the Gulf of Mexico, and those along the U.S. Gulf Coast should continue to monitor its progress.
