Earthquake Activity California

- A powerful 7.0 earthquake was recorded around 10:44 a.m. PT on December 5th about 60 miles offshore of Ferndale, California, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.
- The 7.0 quake is the strongest in the region since at least 2005, when a magnitude of 7.2 occurred, according to the FOX Forecast Center.
- The major quake promoted a Tsunami Warning from Davenport to 10 miles south of Florence, Oregon. The warning included more than 4.6 million people and was allowed to expire just before 11 a.m.
- Shaking from the major earthquake was felt in Napa Valley and across San Francisco.
- The USGS does expect more aftershocks. According to the USGS Aftershock forecast, "there is a more than 99% chance of magnitude 3 and above aftershocks within the next week, and it is most likely that 3 to 280 of these will occur."
- Geologists said several dozen aftershocks have already occurred: the largest measuring a 4.7 just two minutes after the original quake. The vast majority of aftershocks have been measured under magnitude 4.0.
- There is a small chance of aftershocks being stronger than the initial 7.0 earthquake.
- The USGS originally reported that a magnitude 5.8 quake struck Cobb, California, three minutes after the 7.0 quake but later updated its data to reduce that quake to a magnitude 4.1.
