WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

July 7, 2022

Severe Storm Outlook

- The risk of violent thunderstorms continued Wednesday along a 2,000-mile-long zone from portions of Montana to the Carolinas, with flash flood warnings issued in locations where heavy downpours could unfold over potentially days, AccuWeather meteorologists warn.
- "Storms will continue to fire and turn severe along the northern and eastern rim of a dome of heat anchored over the south-central United States through Thursday," AccuWeather Chief On-Air Meteorologist Bernie Rayno said.
- "This effect is often called a ring of fire and can cause some places to be hit by storms multiple times per day and/or day after day."
- The clusters of severe storms will still carry the potential for damaging winds, large hail and frequent lightning strikes. As with many severe thunderstorms, there will be a risk of an isolated, short-lived tornado as well.

Tornado Activity

Ohio

- Powerful storms and a possible tornado tore through the Greater Cincinnati area Wednesday, leaving behind heavy damage.
- The storms have caused widespread damage and thousands of power outages.
- Currently about 45,000 customers are without power.
- Three injuries have been reported by officials, so far.
- The Wilmington National Weather Service office plans to conduct a storm survey in northern Clermont County throughout the day Thursday, July 7.
- The heaviest damage could be seen in Goshen, Ohio where the National Weather Service reported a tornado "observed" at one point.
- A state of emergency has been issued for residents in Goshen.
- Damage could be seen to homes and businesses across the area including the Goshen fire station, an Allstate building and school buildings.
- State Rep. Jean Schmidt (R-Loveland) said she has been in contact with township officials to discuss next steps and how to help those impacted.
