Earthquake Activity

Texas

- A magnitude 5.3 earthquake rattled parts of West Texas late Wednesday afternoon.
- There were no immediate reports of damage.
- The quake was centered near the town of Mentone, and was felt as far away as El Paso, about 170 miles to the west, according to the El Paso Times.
- The U.S. Geological Survey said the quake struck at 3:32 p.m. local time, at a depth of about 6 miles.
- There were a number of smaller aftershocks, Aaron Velasco, a professor of Earth, Environmental and Resource Sciences at the University of Texas at El Paso, told KFOX 14.
- Velasco said he thinks deep water injections for fracking may have caused the earthquake even though it occurred along a fault line.
- The area experienced a 5.0 magnitude earthquake in March 2020.
- Wednesday's quake was the third strongest to ever to strike Texas. The strongest on record was a magnitude 6.0 earthquake that struck near the town of Valentine in Jeff Davis County on Aug. 16, 1931. The second strongest, a magnitude 5.7, was on April 14, 1995, near Marathon.
