WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

November 28, 2023

Flood Risk

Hawaii

- Hawaii is bracing for a week of heavy rain and thunderstorms, increasing the risk of flooding as a Kona Low promises to pull in tropical moisture from the south.
- Rain is expected to increase over the western half of the state, including Kauai, from late Monday through Tuesday and over Oahu by Tuesday morning.
- The Kona Low will then drop in from the northwest on Tuesday and set up just to the west of Kauai by Wednesday.
- At that point, the FOX Forecast Center warns the Kona Low will become stronger with deeper southerly winds, which will pull in the deep tropical moisture across the eastern half of the state.
- The unstable tropical atmosphere will then send periods of rain, which could be heavy at times, and thunderstorms across the island chain from Wednesday through Saturday.
- Hawaii could receive several inches of rain by the time the Kona Low winds down toward the end of the week, with the highest totals being found on the western islands.
- Hawaii is in desperate need of rain to help alleviate drought conditions. However, so much rain in a short period could lead to flash flooding.
