Winter Storm Olive

- Winter storms bringing snow and freezing cold temperatures are expected to continue across the Midwest and California on Thursday, causing widespread power outages—while areas of the Northeast will experience unseasonably warm weather.
- Winter storm warnings are in effect across the Midwest in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and South Dakota, as well as in New York and across New England and in western states like California, Oregon, Colorado, Utah and northern Arizona, according to the National Weather Service Thursday.
- The NWS predicts the winter storm, known as Winter Storm Olive, will bring heavy snow, freezing temperatures and ice to the Great Plains region and parts of the West, with snow rates in some areas as high as one to two inches per hour and snowfall totals of between six and 12 inches in some areas, or even as high as 18 inches.
- Widespread impacts are expected to continue from the ongoing winter weather, with PowerOutage.us showing nearly 900,000 households were without power as of 6 a.m. ET across California, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and New York, and FlightAware reporting 742 cancellations on U.S. flights so far Thursday following thousands of cancellations and delays on Wednesday.
- Multiple areas could break records with their winter storms: Minneapolis, which is expected to get more than an additional foot of snow Thursday, may experience one of the highest snowfalls in state history, while southern California saw its first blizzard warning since 1989.
