Severe Weather Activity New Jersey

- A tornado touched down in Mercer County on Tuesday, the first February confirmed tornado in the Garden State since 1999, the National Weather Service said.
- “There’s a lot of damage,” said Lee Robertson, a meteorologist with the weather service in Mount Holly. He added that survey crews were on the scene and that the agency would post details later Wednesday.
- The tornado evidently touched town about 3:40 p.m. in West Windsor, about 12 miles north of Trenton, around the same time that a warning was issued. The weather service carried reports of “large trees” down.
- Approximately 100 properties in West Windsor sustained minor damage while 160 Lawrence residents were displaced, according to police. Red Cross New Jersey was on hand to assist residents.
- PSE&G restored the vast majority of customers who lost power by Wednesday morning.
