WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 8, 2023

Severe Weather Outlook

- Just about everyone in the eastern half of the country will see some kind of impact from a powerful storm this weekend.
- Rain and snow will be the most far-reaching weather from the storm. Damaging winds are possible along the East Coast from the mid-Atlantic to New England. Meanwhile, severe storms are possible from Texas into Tennessee.
- The FOX Forecast Center expects a fairly disruptive storm that will impact millions of Americans, creating travel trouble and leading to power outages along the East Coast.
- A broad area of moderate to heavy rain will likely develop starting Friday from the Gulf Coast to the Great Lakes and eastward toward the East Coast.
- Flash flooding will be a concern along the Gulf Coast to parts of the mid-Mississippi and lower Ohio valleys on Saturday, while the threat shifts eastward from the Florida Panhandle up to the mid-Atlantic and much of the Northeast on Sunday.
- Gusty winds will likely develop over portions of the Rockies and Plains on Saturday due to the sharp difference in pressure between a wavy cold front and strong high pressure over the interior West. Gusts between 30 and 40 mph are expected in these areas.
- Some snow will be possible on the northwestern side of the low from the north-central Plains and Midwest into the Great Lakes on Friday and Saturday.
- Upstate New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine could see snow accumulating Sunday evening and lingering through Monday morning. A general 1-3 inches of snow will likely fall with locally higher amounts in favored upslope areas and higher elevation areas.
- This storm will also bring the potential for severe weather in the South. Tornadoes, damaging winds and large hail will all be possible from East Texas to Louisiana, Arkansas, western Mississippi and West Tennessee.
