Louisiana

- A radar-confirmed tornado in northeastern Louisiana on Wednesday evening overturned trailers, downed trees and caused more damages as part of a midweek storm system.
- The tornado passed through Tangipahoa Parish, La., about 65 miles northwest of New Orleans and 60 miles east of Baton Rouge.
- Coming early in the evening, the tornado quickly began tossing debris into the air, eventually overturning two mobile homes and injuring three people. None of the injuries, including to two children, were "life-threatening," according to local officials.
- According to Tangipahoa Parish President Robby Miller, other damage included trees downed across the parish, along with damage done to a local gas station. The mayor of the village of Tangipahoa, Sheila Martin, said power lines were also down in the area.
- The mayor said "everyone was safe" thus far and that no fatalities have been reported. She asked for prayers from neighboring cities, saying that damage in the area was "extensive."
- AccuWeather national reporter Bill Wadell reported from Tangipahoa on Wednesday evening, adding that he saw glass windows blown out of homes and that first responders were going door-to-door, making sure residents were safe.
